The Changing Role of National Tourism Organisations

Comment	3
Towards different forms of public-private sector partnership
A unifying force for a fragmented industry	4
Justifying governments' continued involvement in tourism
Selling the country 'brand' rather than specific tourism products
A benefit for the community as a whole, not just the tourism industry
Comparative analysis: caveats and definitions	6
Trends in tourism performance	7
Base data used for the country comparisons
Relationship between population and international arrivals
Tourism's contribution to national economies
Structure and legal status of NTOs	10
Ownership and links with the regions
Partnership with non-tourism stakeholders
NTO budgets and funding	11
Strict comparisons between budgets are impossible ...
... and budgets are rarely set in concrete
State funding still predominates
Marketing and promotions	14
The major spending priority for most NTOs
Private sector contributions still lower than might be expected
Other activities	18
A multitude of tasks
Outsourcing tasks that are better handled by the private sector
Offices and staff	22
Little correlation between number of offices and total budgets
Finding the resources to tap traditional and emerging markets
Evaluating NTO performance	26
Measuring the effectiveness of offices abroad
NTO budgets vs arrivals and receipts
A more meaningful way of assessing ROI
In conclusion – finding the right balance	30
Moving away from strong central government intervention in tourism ...
... and towards a rationalisation of their responsibilities
But some governments have maybe gone too far
