

in this issue:

Comment	3
Growth in demand for low-fare/low-cost carriers continues to amaze Changing traditional business models
World Tourism Trends
The final count for 2003	4
The biggest annual drop ever for world arrivals Wide regional disparities
Short-term forecasts	7
Consensus that 2004 will be a good year – barring unexpected crises Growth should be sustained through 2008 New forecasts from Global Insight/IPK need a rethink
Markets
Europeans' travel intentions for 2004	10
Marked improvement in consumer confidence and desire for travel Strong euro is likely to favour long-haul destinations
Germany outbound	11
No real growth in spending since 2000 Austria moves back into first place German tour operators adapting to demand for dynamic packaging
Belgian e-travel	15
Not a very exciting market, but a captive one for e-travel Senior surfers are the main growth market
Mexico outbound	16
Dominated by travel to the USA, but other sources are gaining ground A young population with high aspirations for travel
Hong Kong outbound	19
Record of consistent growth – if only because of China – comes to a halt Fall in dollar could dampen demand for long-haul North America rated more highly than Europe
Destinations
The Mediterranean	21
New Medworld conference in Malta addresses key issues such as uniformity of product and the impact of new-wave airlines Expect more independent travel and self-tailored packages	